Then, when that is done, I go further back and ask you to name more of these named celebrities. Are they all real? I don't know. I'm not musically inclined, but I'm willing to be convinced. Just click on the name and it will take you to that person's page, including a brief biography (which may or may not be accurate, but we do want to know) and a link to that person's page on the this website. This game started long before Google was having its Googlefest earlier this year. I wanted to see what my favorite musicians would look like with no names or associated links, and in their boxers (see Sancho Panza quote). Of course, Panza is supposed to be a fictional character, but then I thought it would be fun to go back further and find real life celebrities. I found many, many more. I guess that's the difference between fiction and reality. You have four movies to choose from. Vote for your favorite, but consider the order of the lists in the voting results. I had more surprises with the choices for #1 than for #2. First, the list of people from the TV series Sex and the City, in the order I found them here.Lunar dikes as a potential target for laser heating and explosive yield enhancement. Using the newly acquired data and existing models of dust dikes in near and mid-lunar orbit, we demonstrate that laser energy deposition can be efficiently used to cause dust fountaining and explosive yields. During the long period of time between the Apollo era and recent lunar studies, dikes have been the only easily accessible energy reservoir to probe nuclear physics in the lunar environment. Furthermore, the capability of the dikes to cause dust fountaining or explosive yields has been analyzed and some f678ea9f9e
